Good communication skills and an equally good phonetics are crucial in the teaching- learning framework. This is particularly applicable to law schools and law colleges where students need to master the use of good communication skills and the use of phonetics for advancement of their professional career.

The ability to communicate well, both orally and in writing and the use of phonetics, is a critical managerial skill and a foundation of effective leadership. Excellent communication skills and phonetics are important in achieving one's professional ambitions and one's personal goals. Therefore, their importance cannot be ruled out.

One of the biggest reasons why many students suffer is because of poor communication skills and poor phonetics. It affects their functioning in schools and colleges and affects their ability to understand what the teacher is teaching. Hence, as a student, one need to develop one's communication skills for communicating with teachers, building relationships with fellow students, improving the skills of studying and revision, convincing parents to let one study for the career desired. Much less mental stress compared to other students only because you are a better communicator.

With the aim to improve the communication skills and phonetics of its students, IQAC, Dispur Law College is organizing a “Discourse on Communication Skills (A learner's point of view) and Phonetics” on the 05th day of October, 2021 from 11 am onwards on Google Meet Platform.
